

Lisa Walker Johnson

Lisa Walker Johnson deals with some of the most difficult, complicated problems of legal practice management, lawyer performance, and leadership. She is also an expert on all aspects of business planning and implementation enterprise-wide, by business unit or practice specialty. As a psychologist with intensive experience in law firm management issues, Lisa also is particularly effective in helping law firms to manage sensitive and frequently difficult change management issues, such as law firm mergers and the transition of leadership between generations of partners.

In short, she helps lawyers and law firms to make better-informed decisions, achieve challenging goals, and get the best business results. Lisa has published extensively in these areas and appears frequently at major international conferences of legal professionals, including both the worldwide and regional conferences of the International Bar Association, the World Women Lawyers Conference, the Balkan Legal Forum, the Caribbean Commercial Law Workshop, and numerous international law firm networks. Lisa completed a Master's Degree in Counseling Psychology with advanced education in psychology and cross-cultural communications from Michigan State University. She is a member of the faculty of the International Institute of Law and Business in Panama City, Panama, and Miami, Florida, where she teaches a graduate course in change management in the LL.M. program.
